

Healthy food, healthier outcomes for veterans

Local help and resources are available

For many people, food insecurity can lead to an unhealthy diet. There are resources in your community—including some specific to veterans—that can help.

Do you find yourself making these trade-offs?

- Eating low-cost, filling foods that are less nutritious
- Choosing a small variety of foods
- · Skipping meals to afford prescriptions or medical care
- Skipping meals so others in the household have enough to eat

Food insecurity and your health

Having regular access to healthy food is important to maintaining your health and can help prevent health problems from developing. For veterans, this may mean spending less money on healthcare, missing fewer days from work, improving health, and staying active.

Of the households Feeding America serves, 1 in 5 has at least one member who has served in the military.1

Higher rates of food insecurity have been reported among veterans who served in Iraq and Afghanistan (27%), female veterans (28%), homeless and formerly homeless veterans (49%), and veterans with serious mental illness (35%).2

1.3 million veterans live in a household relying on the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) to supplement their food intake.3

Your health and well-being

Having regular access to healthy foods can help decrease your risk of some common and costly health problems, such as:4

Seniors

- Asthma
- Congestive heart failure
- Depression
- Osteoporosis
- Hypertension
- · Limitations in activities
- Diabetes

Adults

- Arthritis
- Chronic kidney disease
